ABSTRACT

In 1987-88, a special project was undertaken involving the identification and verification of significant research collections in microform owned by the Kent State University Libraries. This activity resulted in a printed guide, which was updated in 1990 to reflect additional materials and new information. The revised second edition supersedes the first version in its entirety. It identifies new materials and reflects the library's holdings through May 10, 1990. In addition to a foreword and an introduction, there are two appendices consisting of Kent's recently developed policy, and a proposal form that will be used in considering future acquisitions. Over 350 distinct major microform sets are identified in the second edition. Those selected will appeal to users in various disciplines, but especially in Afro-American Studies, English, history, and political science. The full name of each collection, type of microform, amount of material, and call numbers appear in each entry. The inclusion of the name of the repository that owns the original materials listed will prove of particular value to advanced researchers. Most of the collections that were selected contain this information. Where available, finding aids to be used in conjunction with a collection are also included after the entry. Both editions were sponsored under the auspices of the Reference Department, Kent University State Libraries. (Author/SD)

Foreward

The fact that a second edition of this guide is called for is testimony to its value and usefulness. We have observed that members of our own student body, faculty and staff have made good use of the first edition of the guide, and scholars from other institutions have also found it to be a good beginning point to this important segment of our collection. It is our expectation that this second edition will be enthusiastically received.

While Research Collections in Microform provides an efficient guide to our holdings for our diverse clientele, we see it also as an important resource for collection development at Kent State University and possibly for cooperative collection development among several institutions. Regardless of the use that scholars make of this source, it is offered in the spirit of openness and cooperation that must characterize our institutions in this rapidly expanding age of information.

Introduction

In 1987-88, a special project was undertaken involving the identification and verification of significant research collections in microform owned by the Kent State University Libraries. Stephen Leary, then a graduate student in Library Science, worked on various phases of this effort under the direction of Reference Librarian James Geary who was appointed as the project coordinator.

This revised edition supersedes the original version in its entirety. It identifies new material and reflects the Libraries' holdings through May 10, 1990. Also, in the appendices, are a copy of Kent's recently developed policy and a proposal form that will be used in considering future acquisitions.

Similar to the first edition, the scope of the present bibliography covers only those microform sets and collections having potential research value to advanced students and scholars. Over 350 distinct major microform sets appear in the second edition. As before, those selected will appeal to individuals in various disciplines, but they will be of particular interest to users in Afro-American Studies, English, History, and Political Science. Users should note further that, in a few cases, Kent has only partial holdings (e.g., Menshevik Collection) and these are included. However, certain microform materials are omitted because they tend to be available either in large public libraries or many academic libraries. Such collections include ERIC documents, the Oregon Series, and the New York Times. Also, users are encouraged to consult the microform holdings in Kent's Government Documents unit for current information since new material is added on a regular basis. Users are further urged to consult the staff in Government Documents for assistance in retrieving federal source materials because call numbers may vary from what appears in the online catalog.

In terms of entry format, the full name of each collection is used as the main heading and cross-references are provided for acronyms. Also, cross-references are used in those instances where a collection tends to be known more by a popular than a proper name. The compilation follows a general alphabetical arrangement with the names of manuscript and archival collections being interfiled. Very often the location of original source materials is important to advanced researchers and this information may not be evident in a collection title. In order to address this need, every effort has been made to identify the repository that holds the original manuscript or archival collection. Where possible to determine, an entry may also contain the inclusive dates of the material in a collection.

Further, each entry includes information on the type of microform (e.g., film, cards, etc.) and, in most cases, call numbers. In a few instances, call numbers have been omitted because there exists more than one for the same collection (e.g., ACRL microcards). Rather than delineate the individual numbers for the various components, Kent's present online catalog (i.e., the CATALYST segment of its NOTIS system) can be used to search for a particular title under the heading "ACRL Microcard Series." The point bears noting that many of the collections listed may be transferred ultimately from one physical location to another. With the exception of government documents, the current location for most of them can be easily determined through CATALYST. Most of the non-governmental collections are in storage and need to be requested through the PIAS service desk on the second floor. Usually a collection can be retrieved for use within twenty-four hours after a request is submitted.

In addition to this essentially bibliographical information, many of the entries contain a list of appropriate finding aids (e.g., indexes) that should be used in conjunction with a collection. In some cases, short titles are cited, but call numbers are provided for all of these auxiliary sources. On occasion, the contents of a collection may be described in the Microform Research Collections: A Guide, 2nd ed., edited by Suzanne C. Dodson (Westport: Meckler Publishing, 1984 -- # Ref Desk Z 1033 .M5 D64 1984). Such information can prove very useful to a researcher doing preliminary work and, for this reason, a reference is included at the end of certain entries with the designation, MRC, along with the respective page numbers. Also, users may wish to consult a rather dated "Microforms Notebook" that is available at the Reference Desk.

Finally, it bears noting that some of our collections are available for loan while others are not. Since this compilation may be disseminated beyond Kent State University, it was decided to omit the information because the loan status of a collection can vary depending on factors such as the requesting institution (e.g., NEOMARL vs. non-NEOMARL library), the individual requesting the loan (e.g., advanced graduate students vs. undergraduates), and the actual collection (e.g., archival collections do not circulate). Therefore, each request needs to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis. Consistent with the original purpose of this project, every effort has been made to locate and identify Kent's significant, but nevertheless esoteric, research collections on microform. If you detect any omissions in the course of using this Guide, please call them to the attention of James Geary.

KENT STATE UNIVERSITY LIBARIES

GUIDELINES FOR

PURCHASE OF MAJOR RESEARCH COLLECTIONS IN MICROFORM

Consistent with the research mission of Kent State University, the University Libraries acquire significant microform materials to support faculty and graduate research in conformity with current collection development policies. The following guidelines will assist the University Libraries in determining which major collections should receive the highest priority.

1) Only research collections costing one thousand dollars or more will be considered under these guidelines. Less expensive sets normally can be acquired through departmental monographic funds.

2) Requests for possible purchase must be submitted on the designated proposal form.

3) A three member faculty committee will advise the Associate Dean for Collections and Development on which sets are to be considered for purchase in an academic year. Among the factors to be taken into account will be the merits of a proposal, whether a collection adds to existing strengths, and whether it is needed to support new areas of research interests.

4) Generally, a collection will not be considered if it is available for loan through the Center for Research Libraries or another institution.

5) Any collection purchased will be subject to review after five years to determine whether new supplements or additions should continue to be added to the collection.

6) The University Libraries will consider proposals at least twice during the fiscal year. It is recommended that proposals be submitted by October 1 and April 1 in order to receive timely consideration.

7) A proposal that is not recommended for funding in one year may be resubmitted in the following year(s).

Questions concerning these guidelines and the proposal form should be directed to the Associate Dean for Collections and Development (672-2962).

KENT STATE UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

PROPOSAL FOR PURCHASE OF MAJOR MICROFORM SETS

GENERAL:

This form is intended to assist in the evaluation for purchase of major research collections on microform by the Kent State University Libraries. If a collection is approved for funding, a new proposal must be submitted at the end of five years before further supplements and additions will be considered for purchase. Proposals will be reviewed at least twice a year by a three member committee of Library Administration and other faculty. The deadlines are October 1 and April 1 in each fiscal year.

Please be specific in answering the questions below. Funding for these sets is limited and competitive; a proposal's content will be an important determining factor. Please forward your proposal along with supporting documentation to the Associate Dean for Collections and Development.

II). This open-ended section allows you to explain your need for this collection. In your comments, please be sure to address the following questions: Why is this collection needed at Kent State University? What research interests will it support and for whom (e.g., give specific course titles and numbers)? Do you anticipate it being used by any other department? Does it add to existing collections at Kent? Note: you may want to consult the current version of A Selected Compilation of Research Collections in Microform Held by the Kent State University Libraries at the Library's Reference Desk. Is this a new area of interest? Is the proposed collection available at a neighboring library or from the Center for Research Libraries? Do you need regular access to this collection? Please add any other information (e.g., vitae) that you deem important.

Research Collections in Microform: A Selected Guide to the Holdings of the Kent State University Libraries.

Second edition

Language: English

Document Type: Bibliography (131); Project Description (141).

Geographic Source: U.S.; New York

Target Audience: Practitioners; Researchers

In 1987-88, a special project was undertaken involving the identification and verification of significant research collections in microform owned by the Kent State University Libraries. This activity resulted in a printed guide, which was updated in 1990 to reflect additional materials and new information. The revised second edition supersedes the first version in its entirety. It identifies new material and reflects the Library's holdings through May 10, 1990. In addition to a foreward and introduction, there are two appendices consisting of Kent's recently developed policy and a proposal form that will be used in considering future acquisitions. Over 350 distinct major microform sets are identified in the second edition. Those selected will appeal to users in various disciplines, but especially in Afro-American Studies, English, History, and Political Science. In terms of format, the full name of each collection, type of microform, amount of material and call numbers appear in each entry. The inclusion of the repository's name that owns the original materials listed will prove of particular value to advanced researchers. Most of the collections that were selected contain this information. Where available, finding aids to be used in conjunction with a collection are also included after an entry. Both editions were sponsored under the auspices of the Reference Department, Kent State University Libraries.
